Assistant Professor of Nursing
Location: Knoxville, TN

Tennessee Wesleyan invites applications for the position of Assistant Professor of Nursing with opportunities to teach in didactic and/or clinical courses. Interest in teaching best-practices in maternal/newborn for undergraduate nursing students required. Additional course assignments may include entry-level clinical coursework or community health nursing. This is a 10-month, non-tenure track faculty appointment scheduled to begin on August 1, 2023. Classes and clinicals will be held in Knoxville, Tennessee.

Applicants should possess the following qualifications:
- An earned master's or doctoral degree in nursing from an accredited institution.
- Current unencumbered RN license to practice in Tennessee.
- Licensed RN with three to five years of clinical practice experience required.
- Certification in maternal/newborn nursing preferred.
- One to two years teaching experience in a registered nursing education curriculum at the associate, baccalaureate, or diploma level preferred.
- Familiarity with Assessment Technologies Institute (ATI) products highly preferred.

Qualified individuals should submit a cover letter, curriculum vitae, and names and contact information for three professional references to hr@tnwesleyan.edu Applications will be accepted until the position is filled.

Tennessee Wesleyan University seeks to recruit and retain a diverse workforce that celebrates the all-encompassing diversity of its student body. TWU is committed to sustaining a welcoming and inclusive environment for the campus community that includes a workforce with a wide range of perspectives and experiences. TWU faculty and staff have a passion and desire to prepare students from a broad spectrum of disciplines, cultures, and academic backgrounds towards personal and professional success. TWU encourages applications from candidates without regard to ethnicity, religion, sex, national origin, age, disability, veteran status, sexual orientation, or gender identity.